Why is the Hafs reading of the Qur'an so prevalent?

Of everything I've read, the Hafs-an-Asim reading of the Qur'an is used by the vast majority of Muslims (it's definitely the only I've ever seen or heard used in my area). I've even seen articles claiming that this is the case for up to 95% of the Muslim world, with the Warsh-an-Nafi reading holding second place with a whopping 3%.

However, it is also my understanding that all seven major qira'at are considered co-valid, and are all considered perfectly valid methods of reading the Qur'an. Why, then, did the Hafs reading gain such predominance? Is it somehow more "correct" than the others? Was it promulgated (and the others restricted) via political decree? Is there actually no rational explanation, and it's just...one of those things?

The Ottoman empire adopted that recitation and spread it within the territories they held. Exact same way how Hanafism was spread. I will get some references. – Sayyid May 26 '14 at 3:58

@Sayyid That was my first suspicion, but it still doesn't really explain 95% saturation by itself (compared to Hanafi jurisprudence, which only seems to have about 30-45% saturation depending on source) – goldPseudo ♦ May 26 '14 at 4:05

I guess that when muslims go for hajj or umrah, they are exposed to the recitation of the quran in hafs style. Also most of the qaris who are usually listened to like Shaikh Sudais, etc (the imams of haram, etc) too recite by Hafs. So revert and other muslims are constantly exposed to this style from all over the globe – iylas Jun 1 '14 at 1:20

Infact, the hujjaj (those who performed hajj) are always gifted by a copy of quran and that too is written in Hafs. – iylas Jun 1 '14 at 1:22

@fluuufffy I've seen moshafs copies from medina in riwayat Warsh, but with the usual waqf signs of Hafs. So I guess you can get those too if you insist! – Medi1Saif ♦ Jul 10 '17 at 6:05

My answer is primarily based on this nice history of spreading of the qiraa't of the scholar ibn Amin. Which shows that the qiraa'a of Hafs 'an 'Asim has not even well known or prevalent in al-Kufa itself for many centuries. I tried to summarize it as much as i can.

Note that among the qurraa' of the 7-10 mutawatir and 4 non-mutawatir readings which have somehow survived generally both the teachers and their students are also accepted and trustworthy hadith narrators, with exceptions such as Hafs who have been accused to be da'if, rejected, a fabricator etc.

Al-Bukahri has even reported that Abu Bakr ibn 'Ayash (أبو بكر بن عياش - Sho’aba) who should be his mate as students of 'Asim even denied to even know him! (See here in al-'Oqayly's ad-Do'afa')

The spread of the qira'at according the "old geographical" regions of the Islamic world

The Caliph 'Omar ibn al Khattab has sent some sahaba (May Allah be pleased with all of them) to the different regions like Abu Musa al-Ash'ary to Basra and Abdullah ibn Mas'ud (al hudali) to Kufa, Abu ad-Darda' to a-Shaam ... to teach the Qur'an!

a-Shaam (The region around Syria)

Until the Caliph 'Othman send the mushaf al-Imam or the mushaf copy of a-Shaam with al-Mughira ibn abi Shihab المغيرة بن أبي شهاب the people where reciting according the qira'a'a of Abu ad-Darda'. But there have been some issue's where they still kept the choice of Abu ad-Darda'. Afterwards when they adapted the qira'a'a of 'Othman (according the mushaf) so the qira'a'a of Ibn 'Amr ابن عمر (one of the 7 qura'at) has been influenced basically by 'Othman's and in cases by Abu ad-Darda's and Nafi's نافع (an other one of the 7 qura'at', the Arabic wikipedia page confirms this influence) qira'a'a. According to Imam ibn al-Jazari (our major source when it comes to the 10 qira'at nowadays) this qira'a'a was the major and one could say the official qira'a'a in the region until around 500 a.H. when an excellent qari' of ad-Duri 'an abi 'Amr الدوري عن أبي عمرو came from 'Iraq and introduced this qira'a'a which has afterwards widely spread in the country until the 'Othmans came and "imposed" the qira'a'a of Hafs 'an 'Asim.

al-Basra

Because of the proximity to al-Hijaz the qira'a'a of the people of Basra have been influenced by the qira'a'a of al-Hijaz so at the end of the 2nd hijri century people there where either following the qira'a'a of Abu 'Amr أبى عمرو (which was influenced by the hijazi qira'at) or Ya'qub يعقوب (a pure basri qira'a'a). This last qira'a'a became more and more influence until it was the major one at the 5th century (this confirms a quote of ad-Dani from the Arabic wikipedia). But afterwards the qira'a'a of Abu 'Amr again regained influence in Basra and the most parts of the Islamic world until the Turks "made an end" to its influence.

al-Kufa

Ibn Mujahid quoted a statement of Sulayman al-A'mash (died 148 a.H.) trying to explain the influence of ibn Mas'u'ds (note he was hudali not qurashi) qira'a'a even after the mushaf al-Imam (here referred to as qira-at Zayd ibn Thabit) has been sent to them -my own translation please take it carefully:-

I saw (experienced) the people of al-Kufa and the qira'a'a of Zayd (ibn Thabit) among them is not much more then the qira'a'a of Abdullah (ibn Masu'd) among you, only one or two (to express a few) men are reading it.

أدركت أهل الكوفة وما قراءة زيد فيهم إلا قراءة عبد الله فيكم، ما يقرأ بها إلا الرجل والرجلان.

Note that the qira'a'a of ibn Masu'd was not only in the harf/language of hudail but also containing some abrogated ahruf etc., and he at first rejected the mushaf al-Imam but accepted it later when he returned to Medina (Some scholars say that the person who asked 'Aisha in this hadith was following the qira'a of ibn Masu'd. 'Othman has sent Abdarrahman as-Sulami (whom has been a student of Ali ibn abi Talib the 4th Caliph) with the mushaf copy to al-Kufa. Note that the Kufis for political reasons (their hate towards al-Hajjaj ibn Yousuf a-Thaqafi) rejected the qira'a of 'Asim (who followed the qurashi mushaf and the orders of al-Hajjaj) and kept the qira'a of ibn Masu'd.

So 'Asim ibn Bahdala (also known as 'Asim ibn abi an-Nujud or 'Asim al-Qaari') chose a middle way between both the qira'a of hijaz and the qira'a of ibn Masu'd, but the influence of ibn Mas'ud's hudali dialect is still clear in this qira'a -in total opposite to the people of Hijaz- it pronounces the hamza widely (for example it's more likely for hijazi to say an-Nisa -which is considered as more fasih- instead of an-Nisa, the women, but a clearer example for this is ata'morona (do you order) which is also read atamorona or a-dhi'b (the wolf) which is also read a-dheeb)

Later Hamzah (a persian qaari' and teacher of the other Kufi qaari' al-Kissai) made a mix of all the Kufi qira'at, so his qira'a is influenced by 'Ali, ibn Masu'd and in cases Ubay's qira'a and it goes ahead with the mushaf of 'Othman.

Ibn Mujahid pointed out that the qira'a of 'Asim was spread in Kufa even if it was not the major qira'a, and people who followed it later preferred the riwaya of abu bakr ibn 'Ayach (Sho'aba) as he has been approved with the qira'a many times by 'Asim, but abu Bakr was a withdrawn man, so that his riwaya became rare in Kufa and the riwaya of Hamzah grow instead and this was the major qira'a in Kufa at his (ibn Mujahid's) time. And also as it was the case for a-Shaam the qira'a of abu 'Amr came from Basra and was adapted there for many centuries until the 'Othmans came and "imposed" Hafs 'an 'Asim. And from the south of 'Iraq (especially) Karbala' the qira'a of 'Asim spread to the regions with a Shi'a majority.

Northern Africa and al-Andalus

The first reading which was widely spread there was the qira'a of ibn 'Amir by some preachers like Isma'il ibn Abdullah ibn abi al-Muhajir. Note that most of the soldiers or fighters who have been part of the conquest of al-Andalus came from a-Shaam and brought the madhab of Imam al-Awza'ii there so the people of Maghrib and al-Andalus have known the (shaami) riwaya of Hisham 'an ibn 'Amir first. And in the 2nd hijri century the qira'a of Hamzah reached al-Qayrawan and only a few people used to read according the qira'a of Nafi' according to Hind Shalabi in her book al-Qiraat fi Ifriqya this is due to the fact that the scholars or intellectual people followed imam Sufyan at-Thawri -who himself was a student of Hamza- and even if later the Aghalibah Dynasty (184 aH-296 aH) adopted the madhab of abu Hanifa as an official madhhab the qira'a of 'Asim (who was among the teachers of abu Hanifa) was only one of many other qira'at there.

Ad-Dani (an other major source for the qiraat and Qur'an sciences, no continuous sanad of any qira'a which exists nowadays wouldn't have him in the narrator chain) quoted that ibn Barghout (272 a.H.) was the first one to impose the qira'a of Nafi' in al-Qayrawan. Hind Shalabi in her book (p. 232) corrected this information saying that qari' ibn Barghout was ordered by the Qadi (Maliki certainly) 'Abdullah ibn Talib not to teach any other harf (letter) than that of Nafi'i to his students. The people of Tunis chose the riwaya of Qalun while the western parts of al-Maghrib have chosen the riwaya of Warsh min tariq al-Azraq (a student of Warsh from Medina) So one could say that this qira'a came more or less with the madhab of Imam Malik from Medina to the Maghrib and Andalus.

When did the riwaya of Hafs began to spread?

The historical reports above show that even if Hafs 'an 'Asim was one of the riwayat of the 7 qira'a't which were "defined" by ibn Mujahid, it was not prevalent in any region, but clearly well known by qura'a' of the 7 or 10 qira'a'. To find out when, how and from where it began to spread, we need more facts, in this could only be found based on reports of scholars or in earlier copies of tafsir books, because tafsir books usually had one of the regionally most prevalent qira'a'a as a basis... Yes now almost all tafsir books are based (or have it in the margin) on Hafs 'an 'Asim, but this was not the case only a few hundred years ago!

Ibn al-Jazari (751-833 a.H.) who lived in the days of Timur said that the official reading of a-Sham, al-Hijaz, al-Yaman and Egypt was ad-Dury 'an abi 'Amr. He didn't quote Khorasan or Turkey even if he studied there a long time. But Imam az-Zamakhshari (from Khorasan, died 538 a.H.) wrote his tafsir based on the reading of Abu 'Amr. The same was the case with tafsir al-Wahidi (author of three tafsirs and the famous "asbab an-Nuzul")... A first sign for a tafsir based on Hafs in Turkey is the tafsir of Badr a-Deen al-Monshi ar-Rumi al-Hanafi 981 a.H. Mohammad bin Badr al-din al-Mashni al-Rumi al-Hanafi 981 a.H. states that the riwaya of Hafs was in his country (south of Turkey) the standard. So one could say that after the spreading of riwayat hafs in the 16th century in Turkey it began to spread in a-Sham in the 18th and Egypt in the 19th century. The great hanafi scholar ibn 'Abideen a-Dimashqi (إبن عابدين (1252-1748-1836) quotes that hanafi scholars have chosen the riwaya of Hafs 'an 'Asim and ad-Duri 'An abi 'Amr.

A first sign for a tafsir based on Hafs in Turkey is the tafsir of Badr a-Deen al-Monshi ar-Rumi al-Hanafi 981 a.H. a-Dimashqi) there haven't been any scholars who did some efforts in writing books on the issue of qiraat, so there have been a kind of ignorance for this science in a-Sham especially and in almost all the Islamic world, as the next great scholar on the matter from a-Sham was Ahmad al-Hilwani al-Kabir (1228-1307 a.H.) who, when visiting Mekka the sheikh of qiraat Ahmad al-Marzoqi recited for him in Hafs, which may indicate that this qira'a was the preferred qira'a at the time.

The well known reciter Abdarrashid as-Sofi from Somalia said that the qira'a of Hafs has only began to spread in the world in the 2 last centuries. As the people of al-Mashriq from Egypt, a-Shaam, al-'iraq, al-Hijaz, the Arabic Peninsula, Yemen and Sudan only knew the qira'a of Abu Amr al-Basri in both riwayatt of ad-Duri and as-Susi. The major evidence is that most tafsir books had this qira'a like tafsir al-Jalalyn ... (I myself know a Somali student of him whom learnt both the riwaya of as-Susi 'an abi 'Amr and Hafs from him)

- One major reason -according my source- for this (spread of Hafs) is that after ibn al-Jazari (ا-Dimashqi) there haven't been any scholars who did some efforts in writing books on the issue of qiraat, so there have been a kind of ignorance for this science in a-Sham especially and in almost all the Islamic world, as the next great scholar on the matter from a-Sham was Ahmad al-Hilwani al-Kabir (1228-1307 a.H.) who, when visiting Mekka the sheikh of qiraat Ahmad al-Marzoqi recited for him in Hafs, which may indicate that this qira'a was the preferred qira'a at the time.

Later many countries followed the example and kept the riwaya of Hafs as an official reading.
The long article also includes an anecdote of Algerian salafis who stole/toke the masahif of warsh from mosques (in their country) and replaced it by the masahif Hafs which are distributed for free by Saudi-Arabian authorities.

Conclusion

The riwaya of Hafs has started spreading to become the official riwaya of the Turkish 'Othmans in the 16th century and, because of the archaic printing possibilities been chosen for a first Quran print, that's a major -technical- reason why this riwaya is now so prevalent in the Islamic world.

The other major reason is that after ibn al-Jazari no scholar -in the middle east- has made efforts to improve or publish in the science of qiraa'at for a long period of time, so that only a few people kept in touch with the other qiraa'at and riwayat which were not common in the regions of the Islamic world.

"I've been told by a Salafi-Brother that a well known Saudi scholar when praying behind a scholar from Mauritania began to correct the recitation of the imam, as he didn't know about any other riwaya except Hafs and thought Warsh was not correct!" I don't know how to qualify this statement! But maybe it shows the impact of the absence of scholars of qira'aat in the middle east!

Sheikh ibn Amin also wrote an article which is somewhat against the rawy Hafs where he gathered a lot of narrations and statements showing the inferiority of this rawy (whom he even try to show off as a weak narrator and fabricator for example he added an exclamation of Sho'aba asking where and when this Hafs might have learnt the reading of 'Asim, as he never saw nor met him with 'Asim). All this might be explained by mistakes for example Hafs was living in the house of 'Asim as his mother was 'Asims wife, the name Hafs ibn Sulayman al-Kufi is common so some Hadith scholars might have had confused him with another narrator.

Ibn Amin also said that it is a shame that nowadays riwayat Hafs appears in the margin of tafsir a-Tabari who in many cases rejected this riwaya or considered it as weak or less expressive. For example -I found it by coincidence, so there might be much better and clearer statements- in his interpretation of verse (2:165) he clearly holds a position against the qira'a (by Kufi, Makki and Basri scholars):

<tr>
<th>لو يرى (if they see/consider)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
</table>

and prefers the qira’a (by Shami and Madani scholars):

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>ولو ترى (if you see)</th>
</tr>
</table>

He added that neither al-Qurtobi nor at-Tabari (who was a teacher of ibn Mujahid and from Kufa and therefore should exactly know the qira'at in there) who were well-versed in the science of qira'at addressed the special cases of recitation in riwayat Hafs in their tafsir and counted 24 singularity in his riwaya were no accepted riwaya has a back up for.

There are also accounts saying that the orientalists had some influence.

See also this Article in Arabic on the Issue.

I'd like to add that I also came across a Shi'a article on the Issue, but they only quoted sunni sources (like ibn Mujahid) until the 3rd hijri century. Some scholars say that Shi'a have only paid attention to this science after that time.

And Allah knows best!

Interestingly, it is Nafi’s reading about which we have a historical proof that it was promulgated through a political decree. Otherwise, Hafs’ reading has always remained the sole contender among the Muslim masses. Others did exist but within scholarly circles.

Hind Shalbi writes in his work "Readings by Africans":

"And it is worth noting that the spread of Nafi's reading in Africa was achieved merely due to start of special interest in it. And all this happened in relation to the school of Imam Malik in Africa and (in relation to) the political and intellectual conditions on which that land was at that time" [al-Qira'at bi Afriqiyyah, p235]

This article also mentions that:

...The only exception to this is Qirwan where Qadi ‘Abdullah ibn Talib who in the later part of the third century hijrah passed the order that people should only be taught the reading of Nafi’. Thus, after this, common Muslims as well were forced to read the Qur’an on the reading of Nafi’ in Qirawan and in some other areas which were under its influence. The reason for this probably was that these people were the followers of Imam Malik’s fiqh and about Imam Malik, it has been pointed out above that he would generally prefer the reading of Nafi’.

As for the Hafs’ reading, it is reported about Hafs' grand-mentor (Hafs from Asim from al-Sulami), al-Sulami that:

The first person who taught the reading in Kufah on which ‘Uthman had gathered the people was Abu ‘Abd al-Rahman al-Sulami

Al-Sulami is also reported to have remarked that:

The reading of Abu Bakr, ‘Umar, ‘Uthman and Zayd ibn Thabit and that of all the Muhajirun and the Ansar was the same. They read the Qur’an according to the al-qira’at al-’ammah. This is the same reading which was read out twice by the Prophet (sws) to Gabriel in the year of his death. Zayd ibn Thabit was also present in this reading [called] the al-’ardah al-akhirah. It was this reading that he taught the Qur’an to people till his death.
Knowing that the tradition of memorizing the 10 Qur'aat is old in the Maghreb and Andalus as most books and scholars on the readings came from north Africa the quoted articles just want to give a false impression by quoting some statements, which may explain why the qira'a of Nafi’ is still persevered their despite some of the countries being engaged by the Ottomans! Yes the official reading their is/was about all the time the reading of Imam Nafi’ but the others where also well known and preserved – Medi1Saif ♦ Nov 19 ’15 at 11:31

And Hind Shalabi is a female scholar and university Professor! (See in the article on Islamonline) – Medi1Saif ♦ May 25 ’18 at 10:04

The Hafs recitation is the easiest to learn and master. There are fewer exceptions to the rules of tajweed and pronunciation of Standard Arabic compared to other qiraats, even compared to the narration of Shu'bah. A child (whose mother tongue is not Arabic) can be taught to read the Quran perfectly according the narration of Hafs in a matter of months.

I’d say the same applies even better to riwayat Qalun which is the easiest I know of. – Medi1Saif ♦ Jun 14 at 15:18
It certainly was not. It was more known than other ones and it was adapted by ibn Mujahid as he adapted two riwayat of each of the seven teachers he has chosen. Other scholars like ibn Mujahid's teacher Imam at-Tabari didn't even consider it as a riwaya. Some scholars even say it is strange that between Hafs and Sho'aba there are more than 500 differences while both should be students of the same teacher.

– Medi1Saif ♦ Jun 14 at 15:16

If it was the reading of the masses why it was not spread unless the Othmans have reached strength and power? – ₪ Jun 15 at 10:02
